Instead of losing weight she lost her mind

Sociology student & Army Reservist Sainah Theodore, of Queens, claims the diet pill Natural Lipo X caused her insomnia, led her to argue with strangers, stop her car in the middle of a busy intersection and stab pillows. "I couldn't believe all of this happened to me. It was a blur. I had no recollection of my behavior," said Theodore. She was committed to a mental hospital, according to her lawsuit. The fat-burning pills were spiked with illegal stimulants. Theodore is asking for unspecified damages, and has placed the blame with Natural Health Food Center in East New York.

Wow, be careful some of those natural products, do your research before consumption

Because she wants some money, and her lawyer wants some too, these cost are going to be spread thought the industry, and impede people from being able to help themselves, via legal cost increases.

The Army has height and weight standards, the easiest way to meet these is using discipline. Exercising and making the correct diet choices work best. When you take shortcuts, anything can happen. The fast track is a Fallacy!

 Jarett Mack So can they prove she had no mental health issues prior to taking the pills? If it was indeed the pills you'd think you'd hear more cases like this. Stimulants can lead to aggression, but some would argue so does that rigid military training...is she suing the army too?? Just playing Devil's advocate...there's more to this story.
